The little open salt-cellars which are gray or brown tweed, smartened up with rows of machine stitching and placed beside one's napkin at the table o not commend themselves to the overfastidious. There is altogether too much hance of sharing some one else's sait in a literal sense, since there is nothing to distinguish them from each other in the clearing of the table, and they are by no means emptied and retilled before each meal. Sait sifters are open to no such objections, but to another equaligrave; in damp weather they won't sift, This last error can be corrected either by purchasing the fine quality of sait that is for sale now and that is warranted not to cake, or, more cheaply, by mixing a little cornstarch or even flour with the sait before it is put in the cruet. All trouble is then completely obviated.
